About Project by Project. Founded in New York City in 1998 by Asian American professionals committed to developing new means of raising awareness, volunteerism and capital for the non-profit community, PbP has created an innovative platform by which our volunteers develop leadership skills through engagement, sustained interaction, and direct service with our partner organizations. Social entrepreneurialism and innovative resource building is our methodology. We forge partnerships with community-based organizations and design our annual campaigns based on specific needs surrounding the issue we are championing for a sustained partnership. PbP volunteers use their diverse network of public, private, and community resources to achieve these goals. PbP strives not only to aid organizations, but also to develop leaders as we inspire individuals into a new spirit of philanthropy within the Asian American community. Today we have chapters in Los Angeles, New York, and San Francisco and we have tackled themes facing the Asian American community including Civic Engagement, Education, Housing, Media Arts, Youth, Health Care, Human Trafficking, and the LGBTQ issues. Our mission is to develop leaders through innovative philanthropy. Our vision is an empowered Asian American community.
